Biographical / Historical

Jack Brown served as the first Librarian at the Yale Center for British Art from February 1973 to September 1976. He was responsible for the creation of the photo library, which provided photographic reference for works of art, as well as the early computer databases used for the library collection. Following his time at the Yale Center for British Art, Brown worked at the Cleveland Museum and then the Art Institute of Chicago.

The Reference Library contains over 30,000 titles and 80 periodicals about British art, artists, and culture from the fifteenth through twenty-first centuries. Formats include periodicals and auction catalogues, catalogues raisonnés, biographies, architectural surveys, ephemera, microfilm, and recorded lectures.
