Biographical / Historical

John Woolman Brush was a scholar, professor, poet, writer, father, and husband during his 92 years of life. He was born on December 1, 1898 in Mount Vernon, NY. After spending his childhood in New York, Brush went to Colby College in Maine to study theology, where he graduated in 1920. Brush received his B.D. from Newton Theological Institution in January 18, 1924. Brush began his first ministry in Portland, Maine, at Stroudwater Baptist Church in 1923, and left shortly after he was ordained in 1924 as a Baptist minister. During this time, Brush met and married his wife Hilda. They moved to New Haven, CT in 1925 so that Brush could become the minister at First Baptist Church of New Haven. In 1934, Brush and his family moved back to Maine where he served as a minister at the First Baptist Church in Waterville until 1939. While finishing up his Ph.D. at Yale University in 1940-1941, Brush worked as an instructor of Church History. In 1942 he earned his Ph.D. and began working at Andover Newton Theological Seminary until 1964. Late in 1960, Brush became dangerously ill and was hospitalized for a brief period of time before being released and recovering to live out the rest of his life. Around his retirement in 1964, Brush was awarded Professor Emeritus at Andover Newton. After his tenure teaching, Brush continued his lifelong ventures of documenting his life in writing, traveling, and advancing his theological pursuits by writing sermons, preaching, and giving addresses for various events.

Scope and Contents

The John Woolman Brush papers consist of materials documented and compiled by John Brush himself throughout his career. The collection spans from Brush's early life after high school in 1914 through his retirement, with the latest materials being comments from the late 1970's in some of his earlier journals, and letters from the 1980's.

The collection is split into five series: Correspondence, Educational Materials, Pastoral Materials, Writings, and Journals and Diaries.

John Brush's correspondence spans over 60 years, from 1914 through the 1970's, and includes letters from mentors, publishers, professors, his wife Hilda, his children, and many of his friends and colleagues. In these letters, Brush discusses his own work and others', including the work of his Ph.D. students over the years. He consistently kept in touch with his mentors, and his collection of letters follows their lives and includes letters he himself sent. His letters discuss his personal life, politics, war, and other current events and topics relevant to his personal and professional theology. There is a surge of letters from late 1960 during his illness and hospitalization, and they continue into early 1961. The letters in the early years of his life and after this hospitalization are fewer, but there is at least one letter from almost every year between 1914 and 1989.

Brush's Educational Materials include his student notebooks, course materials, and lectures and papers. His student notebooks include courses about the book of Jeremiah, the psychology of religion, the life of Paul, church history (in several volumes), and homiletics. It seems Brush did not keep his notebooks from his graduate coursework, although he did keep many of his reading notes in journals from throughout the years (which are in the final series of this collection). He did keep intricate notes for the courses he taught and copies of the lectures he gave as a lecturer and professor, and he also kept many syllabi from his courses on church history.

The third series in this collection, Pastoral Materials, consists of liturgy and worship materials, church records, and sermons. "Liturgy and Worship" includes church bulletins from a church in California from Brush's close friend Shozo Hashimoto, a copy of a Reformation Sunday issue of the Andover Newton Bulletin, a prayer journal, one of Brush's personal bibles, and more. The pastoral records he kept include lists of baptisms, deaths, marriages he ordained, and other reports of committees Brush participated in during his career. The last subseries in this collection, Brush's sermons, include numerous sermons of varying topics. There are hundreds of sermons, each with a unique title and based on specific Bible passages. Many of these sermons were written in lettered series and kept organized, an order not disturbed in the archival process. One particular sermon of interest is a sermon Brush wrote against the KKK in 1924 when the local klan donated books about the problems of Roman Catholicism to his church, Glenwood Chapel, and Brush refused them. Brush's sermon outlines the innate problem of otherness and discredits the KKK's polemic against Catholics. The sermon was met with a negative response by the KKK published in a local newspaper, and this article is also included in this archive.

John Brush's Writings are split into three subseries: Publications, Church Pamphlets, and Addresses. His publications, although short, are several. He also wrote a work entitled Stroudwater Days, which was intended to be published as a collection of journals written by Brush describing his time working in his church. Brush's church pamphlets are about prayer, living a Protestant life, church history, and more. The final section of the Writings are Brush's Addresses, which consist of graduation speeches, faculty forum talks, and various others.

Brush's Journals and Diaries are plentiful, thorough, thought-provoking, informational, and detailed. He includes drawings and paintings, poetry both in dedicated volumes and sporadically, and quotes lined up on the inside covers of most of the journals. He has journals throughout his life, and diaries that can be paired up nearly every year with lists of daily events, to-dos, and daily jottings. His journals include reflections on Ghandi, the first televised presidential debate, the birth of Israel as a state, the atom bombs in World War II, the invasion of Poland by Hitler, addresses given by Winston Churchill, and so much more. Brush kept himself up to date on all current events, and his journal entries give a detailed account of living through each event. He also glued in newspaper articles, had entire journals dedicated to notetaking the philosophy and theology books he read, and reflected on many of his domestic and international travels. As the most personally and professionally telling of the materials in this collection, John Brush's collection of journals and diaries draw an intimate portrait of his own mind and the transformation of thought and politics throughout the decades.

Arrangement

This collection is arranged into five series: Correspondence, Educational Materials, Pastoral Materials, Writings, and Journals. J.W. Brush's correspondence is organized by year. The educational materials are organized into three subseries: first, J.W.B.'s student notebooks from Colby College, which are organized by term ("Student Materials"), Brush's materials for preparation to teach ("Course Materials"), and Brush's lectures and papers from throughout his career ("Lectures and Papers"). The pastoral materials include subseries of Liturgy and Worship, Pastoral Records, and Sermons. Brush's writings include Publications, Church Pamphlets (used in Brush's ministry and distributed further), and Addresses. Lastly, Brush's journals are comprised of three subseries: Personal Journals, Reading Notes, and Diaries, all of which are organized by year.

Collection Contents

Series I: Correspondence

John W. Brush kept intricate records of all his correspondence, and also kept hundreds of letters sent to him over the course of his life. Throughout this series, Brush's records and letters give insight into his family, friends, academic relationships, and career colleagues from college until retirement. This correspondence includes letters from publishers, colleagues and students, and his children. Although the volume per year is sporadic, there is a surge in late 1960 and early 1961 during the time Brush was sick and hospitalized. Brush survived this illness and went on to live decades longer, and his correspondence extends into the 1980's.

This series is organized by year, but for a detailed list of correspondence and/or to search for correspondence from a certain person see the New Correspondence Inventory in Box 1, Folder 2.

Series II: Educational Materials

John W. Brush kept most of his undergraduate notebooks from courses he took at Colby College in the 1910's. This coursework was with professors Brush went on to have lifelong relationships with like W. Bradbury, G.E. Horr, and J.P. Berkeley. These materials are in the first subseries, Brush's Student materials. The second and third subseries, Course Materials and Lectures and Papers, include Brush's prep materials and lectures used for courses he taught later in his own career as a scholar and professor.

Series III: Pastoral Materials

Brush's Pastoral Materials consists of Liturgy and Worship Materials, Church Records, and Sermons. These files include church bulletins, records of births, deaths, and marriages, and various sermons and sermon series.

In the third subseries, Sermons, Brush's sermons are arranged in an order set out by J.W.B. himself. Some are in no order but separated by sermon title, some with multiple versions or additions, and others are organized by lettered series (Series A Sermon Notes, etc.). The lettered series are in alphabet order, which is generally in order by date.

Series IV: Writings

The Writings are divided into three subseries: Publications, Church Pamphlets, and Addresses. Over the course of Brush's career, he wrote a series of short books and sermons that were printed as books and church pamphlets. These materials include manuscripts and printed additions of Brush's publications, and copies of church pamphlets authored and distributed by Brush. In the final subseries are numerous speeches given by Brush at various occasions outside of church events.

Series V: Journals and Diaries

John W. Brush was a disciplined writer and he kept journals and diaries of nearly every year of his life. His journals are split into three subseries: Personal Journals, Reading Notes, and Diaries. The personal journals include thoughts, poems, notes, and reflections relevant to his personal and academic life, as well as to current national and global events such as presidential elections, political events, global conflicts, and world wars. Some of these notebooks, in particular the Business Year Book journals, include data and information pertinent to the year the journal was printed such as postage prices, flag rules, notable inventions, populations of major cities, the seven wonders of the world, legal holidays in various states, and more. The Reading Notes are Brush's notes and ponderings concerning works he has read and research he has done. The last subseries is Diaries which includes dozens of by-year daily calendars of Brush's appointments, calls, and daily activities.
