Shackleton family

The Shackleton family were Quaker educators and writers living in Ballitore, Ireland, where Abraham Shackleton I founded the Ballitore School in 1726. The family also owned a number of flour mills.

Abraham Shackleton I (1697-1771)

Abraham Shackleton was born in Yorkshire, England, to Sarah Brigg and Richard Shackleton. He founded the Ballitore School, a Quaker school in Ballitore, Ireland, in 1726, and was headmaster for 30 years. One of his pupils was Edmund Burke.

Richard Shackleton (1726-1792)

Richard Shackleton, son of Margaret Wilkinson and Abraham Shackleton I, was educated at the Ballitore School, where he befriended fellow student Edmund Burke. He graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, and succeeded his father as headmaster of Ballitore School in 1756. He was also a poet. Shackleton married Elizabeth Fuller in 1749 and they had four children, Abraham II, Deborah, Margaret, and Henry. A year after his first wife's death in 1754, he married Elizabeth Carleton, with whom he had two children who survived to adulthood, Mary Shackleton Leadbeater and Sarah, known to the family as "Blind Aunt Sally."

Abraham Shackleton II (1752-1818)

Abraham Shackleton II, son of Elizabeth Fuller and Richard Shackleton, was educated at Ballitore School and later became a teacher there, before succeeding his father as headmaster in 1779. Shackleton became associated with a group of liberal Quakers in Ulster who were in open rebellion against Quaker discipline. In 1801 he was disowned by the Carlow Monthly Meeting, in a schism within the Society of Friends in Ireland that was known as the "Irish separation." As a pacifist, he refused to join rebel forces occupying Ballitore during the Irish Rebellion in 1798. Following the schism and the brief closure of the Ballitore School, Shackleton traveled, wrote essays and poetry, and managed the Ballitore Mill until his death. Shackleton's scholarly interests included the classics, botany, and astronomy. He married Lydia Mellor (1749-1829) in 1779, and they had nine children: Richard, Margaret (who died at age 9), Abraham III, Elizabeth "Betsy" (1783-1843), Ebenezer, George, Lydia, Mary, and Margaret Shackleton Grubb.

Mary Shackleton Leadbeater (1758-1826)

Mary Shackleton Leadbeater, daughter of Elizabeth Carleton and Richard Shackleton, was educated at the Ballitore School, where she was the only female student. In 1794, she published anonymously "Extracts and Original Anecdotes for the Improvement of Youth." She also published "Poems" in 1808; "Cottage Dialogues among the Irish Peasantry" in 1811; and "Memoirs and Letters of Richard and Elizabeth Shackleton" in 1822. Her "Annals of Ballitore" was printed posthumously in 1862 by Richard Davis Webb as "The Leadbeater Papers." Mary married William Leadbeater, a former student at the Ballitore School, in 1791, and they had three children. The Leadbeaters resided in Ballitore, where he was a farmer and landowner, and she ran the village post office.

Sarah Shackleton (1760-1847)

Sarah Shackleton, daughter of Elizabeth Carleton and Richard Shackleton, known as "Sally" or "Blind Aunt Sally," was an Acceptable Minister in the Society of Friends.

George Shackleton (1785-1871)

George Shackleton, son of Lydia and Abraham Shackleton II, married Hannah Fisher (1803-1873) in 1823, and they had 13 children who lived to adulthood, including Abraham III and Lydia.

Abraham Shackleton III (1827-1912)

Abraham Shackleton III married Anna Webb (1833-1888), and they had six children: Louis George, William Webb, Frederic, Marion, Alice Mary, and John Abraham. After her death, he married Anne Harvey Walpole.

Lydia Shackleton II (1828-1914)

Lydia Shackleton, a daughter of Hannah and George Shackleton, was botanist and artist.

William Webb Shackleton (1867-1935)

William Webb Shackleton was the eldest son of Anna Webb and Abraham Shackleton III. He was educated at the Quaker school in York and trained as a doctor. In 1896, he married his senior partner's daughter, Eileen Clarke (1879-1955). They had two children, Robert Patrick Webb and Eileen Margaret.
