André Thouin (1747-1824)

André Thouin was a French botanist best known for his work in the field of agronomy. Thouin studied botany under Bernard de Jussieu. He was appointed chief gardener of the Jardin du Roi in Paris in 1764, and in 1793 became professor and chair of horticulture at the Muséum national d'Histoire naturelle. Thouin's major publications included Essai sur l'exposition et la division méthodique de l'économie rurale (1805), Description de l'École d'agriculture pratique du Muséum d'histoire naturelle (1807), Monographie des greffes (1821), and Cours de culture et de naturalisation des végétaux (1827). He also contributed to the Encyclopédie méthodique (1782-1832) and journals such as Annals and Memoirs of the Museum of Natural History, Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences, Agricultural Society, and Annals of French Agriculture. Shortly before his death, Thouin compiled his professional papers, which included correspondence, manuscripts, official reports, printed materials, and artwork dating from 1770 to 1823, in a fifteen-volume collection titled Manuscrits agriculture botanique.

Scope and Contents

The collection consists of volumes five through fifteen of André Thouin's fifteen-volume Manuscrits agriculture botanique, documenting Thouin's work as an agriculture botanist and professor at the Muséum national d'Histoire naturelle in France. Included are correspondence, reports, notes, lists and catalogs of plants, memoirs, printed materials, artwork, and other papers concerning botany, gardening, plant propagation, arboriculture, museum administration, and scientific exploration.

The volumes contain letters and reports by Thouin, other naturalists, and government officials respecting acclimatization of foreign plants, trees, spices, and cereals, importation of seeds to France, and horticulture in French colonial settlements in Guiana, Guadeloupe, and Senegal. Materials also document expeditions of Louis-Armand Chapelier to Mauritius and Madagascar, Nicholas Baudin to the West Indies, Jean-Baptiste Leschenault de la Tour to India, and George Samuel Perrottet to Indonesia and the Philippines, in addition to voyages of François André Michaux and his work on acclimatization of North American forest trees. Further included are manuscripts for Thouin's Description de l'École d'agriculture pratique du Muséum d'histoire naturelle and Monographie des greffes, as well as writings by botanists Jean-Nicolas Céré, Joseph-François Charpentier de Cossigny, and Pierre-Antoine Poiteau, and original drawings by painter Adèle Riché.

The collection also contains a manuscript index created by Thouin for the entire fifteen-volume collection. Dates in the titles are Thouin's own and may not reflect the actual date span of materials in each volume.
