Biographical / Historical

The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) was a civil rights organization and served as the youth and autonomously run branch of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. It was founded with the support of Ella Baker in April 1960 at Shaw University in Raleigh, NC. SNCC was focused on racial de-segregation and voting rights for the Black community in the American South. SNCC was active between 1960-1970, with the height of their political activity between the early to mid-1960's. This included the Mississippi Freedom Summer project of 1964, co-organized by the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), and SNCC. Approximately 1,000 (or more) white college students, from the American North, volunteered to organize and teach in approximately 40 Freedom Schools across the American South. The Freedom Schools focused on voter registration, the establishment of a new political party, history, and other subjects Freedom School students were interested in.

Karen Haberman Trusty (born 1945) attended Spelman College, a Historically Black College and University (HBCU), in the Fall of 1963 through the National Student Association Spelman Exchange Program. She was one of very few white students to participate in the program. At Spelman, Haberman Trusty was recruited by James Forman into the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). Haberman Trusty was active with SNCC between 1963-1964 participating in many sit-in demonstrations, non-violent protests, Mississippi Freedom Summer, and other organizing activities. She was arrested three times, including a Fourth of July arrest in 1964. Her and three Black SNCC organizers, including Matthew Jones, a civil rights and Southern Freedom Movement singer, were beaten and arrested after non-violently protesting at a Ku Klux Klan (KKK) rally at Stone Mountain in Atlanta, GA by rally participants. She served as support staff for the Mississippi Freedom Summer project in 1964 at the SNCC Atlanta, GA and Greenwood, MS offices. During that summer, she worked on the Wide Area Telephone Service (WATS) line in Greenwood where she co-collected reports of racially motivated hate-crimes. After organizing with SNCC and returning to Connecticut, she transferred and completed her BA at Harvard University's Department of Social Relations. She went on to organize poor white communities in Detroit, MI and across Appalachia. In 2010, she co-created with then Portland State University student, Conci Althouse, the documentary In Rarefied Air on her organizing experiences with SNCC and the legacy of racism in the U.S.
