Christopher Cox (1949-1990)

Christopher Cox (1949-1990), an editor, author, actor, director, and producer, was born August 27, 1949, in Gadsden, Alabama, to Howard R. Cox, a prominent banker, and Dorothy Trusler Cox. His birth name was Howard Raymond Cox Jr., and his family and childhood friends called him Ray throughout his life. He graduated from Emma Sansom High School, as did his brother Timothy, and sisters Carol and Nancy.

In 1966, at age 16, Cox took a summer job in Washington as a page for Alabama's senator John Sparkman, and then returned to the city the summer after high school to work for two representatives, Armistead Selden and George Andrews. He attended the University of Alabama in Birmingham for two years, where he became involved in college dramatics. Dropping out at the end of his sophomore year, Cox moved to New York in hopes of a career in the theatre and never returned to college (although he did list a 1969 BA from the University of Alabama on some of his resumes). His first role was an understudy for the Mute in The Fantasticks, which he said was the only role open to him because of his Southern accent. It is not clear whether he achieved further study in theater, but ephemera in Series III, Personal Papers, indicates that he took classes at the HB Studio in New York in the fall of 1969.

Cox took Christopher as his professional name in 1970, he wrote to his friend Steven Beil, because when he went to join the Actors' Equity labor union there was a Ray Cox already enrolled. His life in the theatre included performing, directing, and writing both plays and lyrics. His primary contribution was as director of the New Play Series and the Writers Workshop at the Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company, where he produced a dozen works by young playwrights between 1974 and 1976. He performed in both Broadway and Off-Broadway shows through the 1970s before turning more to writing, editing, and photography in the 1980s. In the last decade of his life, Cox worked for publishing houses, primarily E.P. Dutton and Ballantine, and wrote freelance articles and reviews for the Soho Weekly News (published between 1974 and 1982) and other papers and magazines. His book, A Key West Companion, was issued by St. Martin's Press in 1983, and his short study of photographer Dorothea Lange was published by Aperture in 1987.

Cox was affiliated with a literary group known as the Violet Quill (or, as he wrote in his diary on March 31, 1980, the Lavender Quill), whose seven members, men writing for men, are regarded as one of the strongest collective voices of the gay male experience in the post-Stonewall era. Authors Robert Ferro, Michael Grumley, Andrew Holleran, Felice Picano, Edmund White, George Whitmore, and Cox, met several times in 1979, 1980, and 1981 to read aloud from and discuss their works in progress, as well as those by their friends. Also on their agenda were discussions of how they could work together to promote recognition, acceptance, and publication of gay literature beyond the boundaries of their own community. Within ten years Ferro, Grumley, and Whitmore had died from AIDS-related complications, as did Christopher Cox on September 7, 1990. He was 41 years of age.

Though he left Alabama in 1969, the place and the people were never far from Cox's mind, and both regularly appear as central motifs in his stories. The early deaths of his uncle Roy (by suicide in 1956) and his mother (from cancer in 1975) were also significant events in his life and became focal points in his writings. One important job that Cox held was as a secretary to composer Virgil Thomson, from March 1975 through 1977. In his position, he arranged and cataloged Thomson's correspondence and music manuscripts prior to their transfer to Yale University; in turn, the job gave him immediate access to the people in Thomson's circle, and to his neighbors in the Chelsea Hotel where Cox would eventually live as well. Thomson composed his portrait, "Christopher Cox: Singing a Song," in 1981.

In his script for "Neurotic Moon," a 1978 video piece, Cox described the job of Christopher, his main character, as a secretary for "an old, established and famous composer assembling the man's correspondence and musical manuscripts for donation to a large library." About Christopher, he wrote, "What he is doing is putting together the pieces of this man's life while his life is falling to pieces." The number of semi-autobiographical (and outright autobiographical) writings that Christopher Cox left at his death, nearly all of which were incomplete and unpublished, reveal that though many pieces of his life were complex and difficult, they were also an asset as a resource from which he drew to write openly about the gay community, as well as the world he left behind in the South.

William R. Olander (1950-1989)

William R. Olander (1950-1989), the partner of Christopher Cox, was an art historian, museum curator, and critic. Born in Virginia, Minnesota, on July 14, 1950, he attended Northwestern University, where he studied with Jack Burnham, and received a Ph.D. in art history from New York University's Institute of Fine Arts in 1983. His dissertation, Pour Transmettre A? La Poste?rite?: French Painting and Revolution, 1774-1795, was guided by the noted art historian Robert Rosenblum. After internships at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Toledo Museum of Art, Olander was appointed curator of modern art at the Allen Memorial Museum at Oberlin College; he held that position from 1979 to 1984, and served as the museum's acting director in his last two years there. On January 1, 1985, he became curator at the New Museum of Contemporary Art in New York, and met Christopher Cox in the spring of 1986. Olander was senior curator at the New Museum when he died from AIDS-related complications on March 18, 1989. An obituary and papers related his memorial service and the William Olander Fund at the New Museum are in Series I, Box 5, folder 113.

In addition to organizing exhibitions at both museums during his years there, Olander served as a guest curator, juror, or catalogue essayist for shows in many other venues. Among his exhibitions were the Allen Memorial Museum's New Voices series: 6 Photographers (1981) and Women and the Media: New Video (1984); Drawings: After Photography (circulated by Independent Curators Incorporated, 1984); Fake (The New Museum, 1987); and retrospectives of the work of artists May Stevens (New Museum, 1988), Edgar Franceschi (El Museo Del Barrio, 1988), and Janet Cooling (Beacon Street Gallery, Chicago, 1989). He wrote, as well, numerous exhibition and book reviews, and presented papers at academic institutions and conferences on the topics of French painting, new media, photography, and postmodern theory. Particularly interested in the work of women and other marginalized artists, Olander often incorporated social and political statements, performance art, video, film, and photography into his exhibition programs.

William Olander is probably best remembered for his activist work within the art world, particularly for his invitation to the collectivist organization ACT UP/NY (AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, New York) to fill the main show window of the New Museum's building at 583 Broadway. Unveiled on November 20, 1987, the landmark installation is known as "Let the Record Show..." after Olander's statement in the accompanying brochure: "Let the record show that there are many in the community of art and artists who chose not to be silent in the 1980s." The display incorporated a bold neon sign stating "SILENCE = DEATH," which brought the group's slogan to a wider public awareness.

Scope and Contents

The Christopher Cox Papers consists of the writings, correspondence files, and personal papers of the writer, director, and producer Christopher Cox, and of his partner, the art historian William Olander. A typed list titled "File Cabinets (Drawers Needed)," now in the Series III folder Miscellaneous notes (Box 23, Folder 402) suggests Cox's home office filing arrangement and takes into account a large part of the material now present in the collection: Cox's correspondence files; personal and family papers spanning his lifetime; his writings and theatrical work; and documentation of the positions he held with Virgil Thomson and the Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company. The list also reveals that what is not present in the collection are the accomplishments for which he is most noted: there are no files for his book A Key West Companion (1983); there only two examples of his published articles; and there is little evidence of his career as a photographer beyond a folder of photo orders (Box 10, Folder 205) and the credited images that appear in publications of authors such as Edmund White. However, with its highly descriptive homoerotic writings and visual material, the collection is a rich primary source for chronicling gay culture, lifestyles, and literature in New York during the 1970s and 1980s, as well as Off Off-Broadway theatre in the 1970s.

Perhaps as a holdover from his time as a secretary to Virgil Thomson, Cox kept most of his papers neatly filed in manila folders, many with typed paper labels. This is particularly true for the pre-1983 material; for years afterward, most of the papers and correspondence were not in any discernable order, and were not received in file folders. For the most part, Cox's file titles have been retained, though the current series arrangement was instituted when the collection was processed in 2007.

Arrangement

The collection is organized into eight series: Series I. Correspondence (1963-1990, undated); Series II. Creative Work (1969-1989, undated); Series III. Personal Papers (1935-1990, undated); Series IV. Virgil Thomson Files (1947-1984, undated); Series V. Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company Files (1965-1978, undated); Series VI. Subject Files (1927-1989, undated); Series VII. Writings of Others (circa 1949-1987, undated); and Series VIII. William Olander Papers (1968-1989, undated).

Collection Contents

Series I: Correspondence, 1963-1990, undated

4.17 linear feet (10 boxes)

Series I. holds letters, both personal and professional, from friends, colleagues, and lovers. It is arranged alphabetically by correspondent, with set of chronologically arranged single letters grouped at the end. There are multiple folders for three of Cox's former lovers, Bob McDonald, George Morris, and Edmund White, and within them are also a few outgoing letters (some just drafts) from Cox. The letters in Series I were primarily sent to Cox, but in the late 1970s, many were addressed both to Cox and White as a couple. Additional letters to Cox appear in other series in the collection: Series III Personal Papers holds all material, including correspondence, connected to Cox's family, and there are a few letters filed in with his "Journal Notes" in Box 21; letters to and from Virgil Thomson are filed in Series IV; and correspondence relating to Cox's work with the Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company is filed in Series V.

There are some business letters, both to and from Cox and his employers, in the series, though most of the letters are personal in nature. Many of his colleagues at periodicals and publishers, such as the editor Ashton Applewhite, remained in contact with him after their professional involvements ended, and it is clear from their letters they were fond of him even when they could not assist him professionally. Generally speaking, the correspondents were connected to Cox through his publishing and theatre ventures, though some were very intimate friends and acquaintances and their letters, such as those written by Kenneth Locklear, an inmate in a North Carolina prison, contain explicit sexual suggestions and descriptions. At the other end of the scale is the folder for E.P. Dutton, which holds a long strip of paper on which his officemates wrote farewell notes when Cox left the company in September 1983.

In addition to Virgil Thomson, Cox also worked briefly for Nicholas Nabokov just before the composer's death. His folder holds letters from Nabokov to others. Most of the letters have a draft in Cox's hand (likely a dictation) with a typed carbon; there is one draft in Nabokov's hand.

The four folders of letters from George Morris were mostly written during the summer of 1977, when he was living in New York City and Cox was in Paris with Virgil Thomson. A native Texan, Morris (born in 1943, died of AIDS in 1989) reviewed films for the Village Voice, among other publications, but eventually settled in Austin and became an influential critic, mentor, and leader in that city's film community. His letters to Cox functioned as almost daily reports and closely document Morris's activities in New York, including accounts of his movie-going experiences.

There are several folders of papers relating to Edmund White that include both correspondence and some of his writings. The first has letters to Cox, with a few from Cox filed in. The second holds letters written specifically to and from White and John Barth, Joyce Baronio, Kay Boyle, Alfred Corn, and Vera Nabokov, dating from 1978-1979. Cox kept all White's letters and writings together, as opposed to separating the letters and writings of other authors, most likely because his relationship with White was so deeply personal and meaningful. That arrangement has been retained here. One folder with White's miscellaneous writings has a photocopy of the typescript of his essay "Nabokov: Beyond Parody" (1983), a manuscript of an untitled essay on Roland Barthes, a carbon typescript of a review of Ivan Morris's book The Nobility of Failure (1975), and an edited carbon typescript of the first chapter of his novel, A Boy's Own Story (1982). The two folders for White's books have reviews, dust jackets, invitations, and profiles of the author, which also include photographs of White taken by Christopher Cox. Reviews for Nocturnes for the King of Naples include a letter from Cox to the editor of The Advocate disputing a poor review the book received from the paper's literary critic.

At the end of the series is miscellaneous correspondence, such as cards, letters, and mass mailings, that were kept by Cox in a set of files that he had created and labeled "General Correspondence," "Employment," and "Photography." These chronological files hold single letters, notes, and birthday and holiday cards from friends and colleagues (those from his family are filed in Series III, Personal Papers with other family correspondence). During processing, additional files were created to separate out mass mailings sent to Cox from organizations of which he was a member, such as the New York City Ballet, or where his name appeared on a distribution list, such as commercial art galleries and clubs.

Arranged alphabetically, followed by general correspondence filed chronologically.

Series II: Creative Work, 1969-1989, undated

3.34 linear feet (8 boxes)

The first subseries, Writings, is arranged under five headings: Articles and Essays; Novels; Stories; Video and Film Projects; and Miscellaneous material related to his compositions. The second subseries, Performances, contains files on theatrical events in which Cox participated, as either an actor, singer, or director. It excludes his work with the Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company, all of which is filed in Series V.

The first group of Writings, Articles and Essays, has a selection of Cox's non-fiction work, some of which may have been published, though there are only two examples of articles that appeared in print. Here too are three files on the Chelsea Hotel which document his interest in writing an article (and then a book) on the place that was his home from 1982 to 1985, but he abandoned the project when he learned that a picture book on the residence had been released. The folders contain drafts of his essays as well as his research material, including transcripts of interviews he held with Stanley Bard, the hotel's manager from the 1950s through 2007, and a long-time resident, Mildred Baker. The Novels section has material related to four unfinished novels for which Cox had set up series of files to hold his drafts and notes. Most of the projects drew their storylines from personal experiences: "Alabama" is based on his childhood memories; "Doe's Pillow" has references to characters he encountered in the South; "Gay Sapho" [sic] is a roman à clef which concerns his affair and breakup with Edmund White; and "Dreams from a Biology Classroom" was inspired by his mother's death from cancer. The Stories section also has files he set up, which contain tales largely drawn from his personal experiences. Also among these is "The Sounds of his Childhood," which is about his partner Bill Olander, and includes a draft of a letter Cox wrote to Edmund White about Olander. "The Magic of Buddy Simms" takes place in Key West, and its folder contains Cox's notes on corrections and additions for future editions of his 1983 Key West book.

It is unclear whether Cox ever submitted any of his works of fiction to publishers, with the exception of "Memory/Winterdance"; that file has an undated letter of rejection from The Saturday Evening Post. A version of his story "Aunt Persia and the Jesus Man," was published after his death in the anthology The Violet Quill Reader (1994).

The Video and Film Projects section has files with Cox's plans, notes, scripts, and storyboards for a number of works, some of which reuse content from his other writings, while others, such as "Happy Love Has No History," are autobiographical in nature. Cox was a founder of Endless Sleep Productions, a self-described "informally structured collective of writers/directors/performers banded together for mutual assistance in producing individual works." The other members were William Dolson, Philippe Roy, and Margaret (Peg) Zajonc. A folder in this section has descriptions of nine proposed video pieces, and according to one of his resumes in Series III (Box 23, Folder 393), Cox's video, "The Canary Wears Bangs" was shown at the Birmingham [Alabama] Arts Festival in 1977. The last folder in the subseries was titled by Cox "Notes for new video pieces" and has a multi-page and untitled narrative for another autobiographical work featuring Edmund White and George Morris.

Aside from his personal history, some of Cox's other inspirations are evident in the production folders: "The Bleeding Scissors" holds a battered 1955 paperback edition of Bruno Fischer's 1948 book of the same title, and "The Salad Dressing Murder" has newspaper clippings about a slain Alabama coed whose body was found near a grocery bag holding a bottle of salad dressing.

The subseries Performances holds files on theatrical and film productions in which Cox was involved as a director, actor, collaborator, or technician. Dames at Sea has only a set of handwritten notes on lighting, while two productions in which Cox was a member of a touring company, Jesus Christ Superstar and Two Gentlemen of Verona, include programs and pay stubs. The largest group of files exists for A Christmas Carol, a version of the Charles Dickens story conceived and directed by Cox, and presented at the Queens [New York] Festival Theatre in late 1977. Two of the productions, Blood from the Heart of America and The Company Stow, were collaborative events based on texts by Doug Dyer with lyrics by company members including Cox. The folder for the James Joyce Memorial Liquid Theatre, (a 1972 work of performance art at the Guggenheim Museum that was subtitled "an experiment in making people feel good") contains a set of pastel drawings of the cast members.

Organized into two subseries: Writings and Performances.

Series III: Personal Papers, 1935-1990, undated*2.92 linear feet (7 boxes)*

The first subseries, Diaries, holds Cox's own records of his life, beginning with seventeen volumes of his diaries and daybooks, covering the years 1960, 1964, 1965, and 1968 through 1980. They are commercial diaries and planners in which Cox recorded varying amounts of information: some have just appointments and brief notes about meetings (including dinners, listing his fellow diners), while in others, such as his 1968 book, he recorded world events and his thoughts about them. The subseries Journal Notes is a set of files organized and labeled by Cox. They cover the years from "Before 1964" through 1978, and have individual sheets of paper on which he wrote or typed narratives that are part diary, part memoir, and part short story, along with some letters he received. Many of the events and situations appear later in his creative writings. Added to the subseries are two bound blank books which were found in with miscellaneous material, each with just two pages of autobiographical narrative written in Cox's hand.

The subseries Family Papers is arranged in three groups: Raymond Cox Jr. Documents; Family Correspondence; and Family Documents, which hold papers about, to, and from Cox and his family of origin. The first section contains documents ranging from Cox's baptism records to his high school diploma and prom photographs, some college material, and papers relating to his life in New York City, including his resumes and autobiographical statements. The second section, Family Correspondence, has letters to Cox from his parents, sisters, brother, uncle, and grandmothers. There is also one file of letters from Cox to his grandparents and parents. Family Documents holds some school records for Cox's mother, Dorothy Trusler Cox, which are among the earliest papers in the collection, as well as the diary of his paternal grandmother, and some miscellaneous genealogical material, including a family chart drawn out by Cox. The file on Cox's uncle Roy, a veteran of both World War II and Korea who died by suicide at age 31 in 1956, holds photographs, a newspaper obituary, and sympathy notes from family friends; Roy Cox figures prominently in Christopher Cox's creative writings, particularly his novel "Alabama."

There are few photographs of Cox found in the collection, and most appear in random locations within this series.

One notable personal document in Cox's papers is a typewritten and partial last will and testament that he signed on March 4, 1980. Though it might logically have been filed in this series, the item remains where he had placed it, in with Edmund White's letters in Series I. The document specifies Cox's wishes for his the disposition of his photographs, negatives, papers, cats, and ashes, though he did not name an executor, finish the document, or have it notarized or witnessed.

Organized into two subseries: Diaries and Family Papers; the latter is organized into three sections: Raymond Cox Jr. Papers; Family Correspondence; and Family Documents.

Series IV: Virgil Thomson Files, 1947-1984, undated*0.63 linear feet (2 boxes)*

Series IV contains files from Cox's two-year term as a secretary/assistant to the composer. The first subseries holds letters between Cox and Thomson, as well as correspondence to and from Thomson and third parties which was handled for him by Cox. The letters consist of drafts in Cox's hand as well as in Thomson's hand. Additional letters between Thomson and third parties written during the summer of 1977 are in the Travel Files subseries.

The Thomson Collection subseries holds material about the composer and his archive. The subseries is arranged in two groups: Administrative Papers and Collection Material. The former holds manuscript and typed collections management lists, administrative notes and lists, and a selection of Thomson's stationery from New York and Paris. The latter section has material that predates Cox's employment, and would most likely have ended up with Thomson's archive (now in the Irving S. Gilmore Music Library at Yale), but was kept by Cox. This group includes three letters from Alice B. Toklas to Thomson, and some of the ephemera such as programs from performances of Thomson's works and a file of Thomson's writings holding his handwritten notes, parts of essays, and typed descriptions of his compositions. The Photographs folder has portraits of Thomson and Jean Cocteau, and six photo-postcards by Carl Van Vechten of theatrical performers in costume.

The subseries Travel Files holds correspondence and ephemera related to Thomson and Cox's 1977 summer in Paris and London. They sailed over and back on the Queen Elizabeth 2, and Thomson participated in the ship's entertainment program both ways. The ship's file for May 1977 has a color photograph of Cox and Thomson aboard the ship.

Organized into three subseries: Correspondence; Thomson Collection; and Travel Files.

Series V: Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company Files, 1965-1978, undated

0.83 linear feet (2 boxes)

The Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company, active from 1971 through 1980, was headquartered at New York's Church of the Transfiguration (known as The Little Church Around the Corner), an Episcopal parish historically connected with the performing arts. Its founder and executive director was Cathy Roskam (afterward Rt. Rev. Catherine S. Roskam of the Episcopal Diocese of New York). Christopher Cox was director of the company's New Play Series and Writers Workshops from 1974 to 1976.

The files contain letters to and from both Roskam and Cox, as well as internal memoranda, notes, and general publicity material about productions mounted at the church and other places. There is more extensive documentation for plays and performances directed by Cox, such as April Fish, Eddie, and Penetration Flatts; including an undated audio recording of a performance of Eddie. Alvin Ross's correspondence folder contains two untitled watercolor portraits, and one of the production files for Adam and Eve has his artwork for the chamber dance-opera's flier. There are a few additional pieces of correspondence related to the Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company in the Series I files for Aaron Copland, Eduardo Manet, Don Parker, Ned Rorem, and Richard Vetere, though in most cases it seems that Cox simply used the company's stationery for the letters.

Series VI: Subject Files, 1927-1989, undated*1.88 linear feet (6 boxes)*

Series VI holds reference material that Cox kept on file and, as with the other series, most of the folders here were created and titled by him. The first subseries is arranged in alphabetical order and contains copies of articles, newspaper clippings, promotional literature, and some manuscript notes on topics of interest in his life and which are dealt with in his personal writings. Two of the folders hold more unusual material: the file for Ben Meiselman has correspondence sent to musicologist Herbert Weinstock, including letters from Harry Cardillo, Carlos Chavez, Aaron Copland, and Igor Stravinsky. Additional items in the folder are a printed programs from the New York City Opera's premier of Copland's The Tender Land (1954), two 1937 appearances by Uday Shan-Kar and his Hindu ballet, and the Hamburg State Opera's New York premiere of Gunther Schuller's opera The Visitation. Weinstock was a long-time editor with Alfred A. Knopf, and Meiselman was his partner, but his, or their, connection to Cox is not known. Cox's Sado-masochism folder contains five snapshot photographs and some graphic and highly descriptive correspondence and notes from several men, some replying to advertisements he had placed in periodicals.

The second subseries, Travel Files, holds Cox's manuscript research notes, contact names, maps, and tourist information that record his trips abroad, most of which were made for business reasons, for either commissioned articles or those he hoped to write. These folders are arranged in chronological order. Additional travel material from Cox's 1977 trip to Paris with Virgil Thomson is filed in Series IV.

Organized into two subseries: General Topics arranged alphabetically; and Travel Files arranged chronologically.

Series VII: Writings of Others, circa 1949-1987, undated*1.25 linear feet (3 boxes)*

Series VII primarily holds photocopies of typescripts, galleys, and some published works, most of which appear to be texts collected by Cox while he was employed by publishers. Some were sent by authors or publishing colleagues for his review but in the case of Jean Cocteau, there are photocopies of four of his books that were issued in England, and may have been under consideration for American editions. Some of the texts have explanatory notes attached but most are alone in their folders. The largest set of files is for Robert Wilson's opera The Civil WarS, which Cox attempted to have published by Ballantine Books during his tenure at the firm. For that project, there is a correspondence file, photocopies of versions of the texts in English, French, and German, and a volume of the work that was published in Germany in 1984.

Unusual among the other papers in the series is a set of three files concerning proposed productions of "Ladies Voices and What Happened," originally a 1930s collaboration among Gertrude Stein, Maurice Grosser, Harry H. Dunham, and Paul Bowles. Christopher Cox attempted to revive the project in 1975 through his contact with Maurice Grosser, who encouraged him to convince Virgil Thomson to compose a score. Their correspondence is foldered here with a contemporary typescript of the play. Grosser apparently gave Cox his archival files on the project, as the other two folders hold photocopies of two letters, a postcard and a typed agreement from Gertrude Stein to Dunham; letters to Grosser from Dunham, Donald Gallup at Yale University, and Iris Barry at the Museum of Modern Art; and several drafts and treatments of the script.

Writings by Edmund White are filed with his correspondence in Series I as they were originally kept by Cox. Theatre scripts that were submitted to Cox by various authors are held in the Series II Creative Work subseries Performances, and Series V, Joseph Jefferson Theatre Company Files.

Series VIII: William Olander Papers, 1968-1989, undated*2.5 linear feet (6 boxes)*

Series VIII holds a small group of letters to and from Olander, but primarily contains his writings and research files, with a set of appointment books that span the last decade of his life. The letters in the first subseries are from artists, academics, and institutions with whom he worked. Academic Papers has material from Olander's college and graduate school years, including some subject files from his dissertation research. Professional Papers has subject files on some of the topics he covered in his curatorial work; they primarily contain photocopies of articles, newspaper clippings, small exhibition catalogs, and flyers for events and programs, as well as a set of seminar lectures by T.J. Clark. Also filed here is an audio recording of a 90-minute interview that Olander held with the California artists Bruce and Norman Yonemoto. A poster published by the artists' collective The Guerilla Girls is also filed in this section. The Miscellaneous Topics folders at the subseries' end include typescript essays, a master's thesis, and lecture scripts. Only one folder in the section holds Olander's own manuscript notes.

The Writings subseries is arranged in seven sections: Articles; Book Review; Essays; Exhibition Reviews; Lectures; Other Writings; and Other People's Writings. The first six sections contain a combination of typescripts, lecture notes, and published writings, and include full periodical issues, tear sheets, and copies of exhibition catalogs. The Other Writings section holds more of Olander's words as recorded through panel discussions and interviews, as well as a script he wrote for a video production. The longest and most revealing interview in the section is the conversation he had with Marcia Tucker, the founding director of The New Museum; it is undated but judging from Ms. Tucker's cover note to him, most likely occurred in late 1988 or early 1989.

The final section, Other People's Writings, has articles that mention Olander. The Personal Papers subseries at the end has a mixture of material, including folders of AIDS literature, (most of which is dated 1987), and Olander's notes on word processing. The subseries also holds a folder of astrological charts, with diagrams and an eight-page reading for Olander, and diagrams for three others, including Allen Darr and Tom Sokolowski. An issue of the Minneapolis Tribune's Sunday magazine is the earliest item in the series; it has an article on local student art and may include Olander or his friends in the photographs.

William Olander's appointment books close the series. The eight volumes of commercial "week at a glance" planners begin in September 1979 and trail off in August 1988, when his handwriting shows evidence of his paralysis. He entered both personal and professional commitments in his calendars. On the verso of a letter he received from the Rhode Island School of Design (filed in the Correspondence subseries), Olander began to write a history of his illness in which he mentions experiencing his first symptom, "a wracking cough," in a hotel room in Sydney, Australia; that trip appears between August 17 and September 6 in his 1987 appointment book. The name Starrett is first seen in his calendar the week after his return, and appointments are noted weekly through August 1988. Dr. Barbara Starrett was an internist at St. Vincent's Hospital and Medical Center in Greenwich Village, and a pioneer in providing health care to AIDS patients in New York from the epidemic's beginning.

Organized into five subseries: Correspondence; Academic Papers; Professional Papers; Writings; and Personal Papers.
