Scope and Contents

The papers of Norman Morrison Isham pertain to his career as an architect, particularly his work in restoring old houses in Connecticut. The largest portion of the correspondence, which has been arranged chronologically, is between Isham and George Dudley Seymour, and relates to the birthplace of Nathan Hale in Coventry, Connecticut, as well as to other architectural projects. Letters exchanged between Isham and Oliver Gould Jennings concern the Fairfield Memorial Library; those of Annie Burr Jennings, Bishop Edward Campion Acheson, and Henry Watson Kent concern the Glebe House in Woodbury. Correspondence from Caroline B. Knous, Eva B. Leete, George W. Seward, and Henry S. Davis pertains to several buildings in Guilford; there are also letters from Morgan Bulkeley Brainard, Arthur Kingsley Porter, John Frederick Kelly, and Alfred H. Pratt.

Aside from correspondence, this collection contains a small selection of short writings on architecture by Isham, Seymour, and others. The bulk of the collection, however, consists of architectural drawings, blueprints, photographs, maps, printed matter, notes, and other materials arranged by geographical location. The largest sections are those devoted to the Fairfield Memorial Library, the Nathan Hale birthplace in Coventry, buildings in Guilford and Wethersfield, the Glebe House in Woodbury, and the first Yale College house. A number of large drawings, plans, and maps have been separately foldered in an oversize box; cross-references are provided in the box list which follows.

These papers were given to Yale University in 1948 by W.D. Miller. Related materials can be found in the George Dudley Seymour Papers, Ms. Gr. No. 442.
