Biographical / Historical

Rocko Michael Fasanella was born in Trenton, New Jersey in 1916. He received his bachelor's degree from Yale in 1939, and his medical degree in 1943. Fasanella was an intern (1943-1944), an assistant resident and resident in ophthalmology (1948-1950), and chief of ophthalmology (1951-1961) at Grace-New Haven Hospital in New Haven, Connecticut. He was also an instructor (1950-1951) and associate clinical professor of ophthalmology and visual science (1961-) at the Yale Medical School. Fasanella has pioneered many innovations in his field and has been active in humanitarian causes around the world. Fasanella died at his home in Orange, Connecticut, on February 11, 2009.

Scope and Contents

The Rocko M. Fasanella Collection, which dates from 1921-1991, consists of correspondence, printed material, slides, and a videocassette which document the Fasanella-Servat surgical procedure for minimal ptosis. This operation was developed by Rocko M. Fasanella and Javier Servat in 1961. Related items consist of printed material pertaining to ophthalmic surgery and biographical information on Rocko M. Fasanella, Javier Servat, and other renowned ophthalmologists.

Dr. Leon Stansfield Stone is also highlighted in this collection, with reprints, writings, films, slides, and other printed material documenting his experiments on the regeneration of the eye of an amblystoma, a salamander-like animal. In recognition of this work, Dr. Stone received the Doyne Award from Oxford in 1940 and his discoveries form the basis of modern research into the regeneration of traumatized nerves.

Arrangement

The collection is arranged by accession.
