Biographical / Historical

Theodore James Holmes was born in Utica, New York, April 26, 1833, the son of Sylvanus and Elizabeth Hoyt Holmes. He graduated from Yale College in 1853, taught for three years in the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb in Hartford, and then entered Union Theological Seminary. After graduation in 1859 he went to a mission church in Richmond, Vermont, and in 1861 was called to the Congregational Church in East Hartford, Connecticut. In the same year he married Ellen Louisa Goldsmith, who was born in Little Compton, Rhode Island, December 26, 1841, the daughter of Reverend Alfred and Sarah Merrill Goldsmith. In 1863 Theodore was granted a leave of absence to enlist in the Union forces and was commissioned Chaplain in the 1st Connecticut Cavalry and served until his resignation in 1865. He returned to East Hartford where he remained until 1873. He later held pastorates in Brooklyn, Baltimore, Newton Center, Hopkinton, Massachusetts, and finally returned to Richmond, Vermont for the last few years of his active ministry. He died in Concord, New Hampshire in 1906. (Margaret Owen, donor, 1978).

Scope and Contents

Most of the letters included in the papers were written by Theodore to his wife, a few by her to her parents. The plan apparently was to make a formal Journal to cover his war experiences. He wrote frequently and fully to Ellen and she copied the letters, slightly edited, into the Journal. The existing letters, however, cover only a part of the war period; gaps in the account are filled by entries from the Journal.

The Alfred mentioned by Ellen was her younger brother. Theodore mentions his sister Julia, and his brothers Louis, Charlie, and Frank. The Olmsteds in East Hartford were life-long friends. The word "contraband" refers to escaped slaves. (Margaret Owen, 1978).
